

This map displays the Houston, Texas metropolitan area with a heatmap overlay. The color gradient indicates the density of a specific variable, with red representing the highest concentration and blue representing the lowest. The highest density (red) is concentrated in the central urban core of Houston. Other areas of moderate to high density (yellow and orange) are visible in the surrounding suburbs. The map includes major highways and labels for various cities and neighborhoods. The data is attributed to Google, 2015.

